BREATHING POISON, NOT AIR.. DELHI-NCR SOUNDS THE ALARM!

Loni Emerges as One of the Most Polluted Areas After Diwali – Industrial Emissions, Vehicular Smoke and Dust Pose a Serious Health Threat

The festive celebrations of Diwali may have come to an end, but the pollution crisis gripping North India has intensified, leaving millions of people struggling to breathe clean air. The situation is particularly alarming in Loni, a town in Uttar Pradesh located close to Delhi, where air pollution levels have reached extremely dangerous proportions. Loni has emerged as one of the worst-affected areas in the Delhi-National Capital Region (NCR) following Diwali. According to pollution data, the average PM2.5 concentration in Loni over the past 12 months stood at 112.5 micrograms per cubic metre. This is nearly 22 times higher than the World Health Organization's (WHO) recommended annual guideline of 5 micrograms per cubic metre. The Swiss air-quality monitoring organisation IQAir has also identified Loni among the world's most polluted locations in its annual pollution rankings.““TEN MAJOR FACTORS BEHIND THE POLLUTION CRISIS : The alarming air quality in Loni is not merely the result of Diwali celebrations. A combination of industrial, transport-related, environmental and meteorological factors has contributed to the worsening situation.“1. Industrial Emissions: Industries and small-scale manufacturing units operating in and around Loni release harmful smoke and toxic pollutants. Metal-melting furnaces and other industrial activities further contribute to deteriorating air quality.“2. Road Dust: Poorly maintained roads, damaged surfaces and inadequate dust-control measures allow large quantities of dust to enter the atmosphere. The problem becomes particularly severe during winter.“3. Construction Activities: Continuous construction of residential buildings, real estate projects and infrastructure facilities generates substantial dust. Excavation and the improper handling of construction materials further aggravate pollution.“4. Heavy Vehicular Traffic: Loni is connected to important transport routes linking Delhi, Ghaziabad and Baghpat. Heavy traffic, particularly trucks operating along the Eastern Peripheral Expressway and Delhi-Dehradun Highway, contributes significantly to air pollution through vehicle emissions.“5. Open Burning of Garbage: Increasing population and inadequate waste-management systems have resulted in the accumulation of garbage in several areas. Burning domestic and industrial waste in the open releases toxic smoke and harmful particulate matter.“6. Brick Kilns: Brick manufacturing units in and around Baghpat contribute to air pollution through smoke and harmful emissions. Soil excavation and the movement of raw materials also generate considerable dust.“7. Crop Residue Burning: During the beginning of winter, farmers in Punjab, Haryana and parts of Uttar Pradesh burn agricultural residue to clear their fields. The resulting smoke travels across regions and adds to the pollution burden in Delhi-NCR, including Loni.“8. Adverse Weather Conditions: Falling temperatures, increased atmospheric moisture and reduced wind movement during winter prevent pollutants from dispersing. As a result, harmful particles remain trapped close to the ground, intensifying pollution levels.“9. Secondary Chemical Reactions: Gases such as sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and ammonia react with other atmospheric pollutants to form secondary fine particles. These chemical reactions contribute to the increasing concentration of dangerous PM2.5 particles.“10. Delhi-NCR Pollution Impact: The growing number of vehicles, industrial emissions and large-scale construction activities in Delhi, Ghaziabad and neighbouring areas have a direct impact on Loni's air quality. Pollution does not remain confined to administrative boundaries, making the entire NCR vulnerable.““DELHI ALSO RECORDS EXTREMELY HAZARDOUS AIR QUALITY : The national capital is facing an equally alarming situation. According to official figures, Delhi's Air Quality Index (AQI) touched 483 at around 8:10 a.m., placing it in the 'Severe' category. Meanwhile, private air-quality monitoring platforms such as IQAir reported AQI readings exceeding 1,000 in certain locations, including Shahdara and Defence Colony in South Delhi. These variations underline the intensity of the pollution crisis across different parts of the national capital.““A SERIOUS THREAT TO PUBLIC HEALTH : The growing concentration of PM2.5 particles poses a major threat to human health. These microscopic pollutants can penetrate deep into the respiratory system and reach the lungs and bloodstream, potentially affecting both respiratory and cardiovascular health.Prolonged exposure to polluted air increases the risk of heart diseases, chronic respiratory illnesses and lung cancer. Children, senior citizens, pregnant women and people already suffering from respiratory disorders are particularly vulnerable. Health experts generally advise vulnerable groups to minimise outdoor exposure during severe pollution episodes, avoid strenuous outdoor activities and follow official health advisories.

BEYOND DIWALI: A LONG-TERM ENVIRONMENTAL CRISIS : Although firecrackers used during Diwali can cause a sudden spike in pollution levels, the situation in Loni and the wider Delhi-NCR region cannot be attributed to festival celebrations alone. Industrial emissions, vehicular exhaust, construction dust, open garbage burning, agricultural residue burning and unfavourable weather conditions have combined to create a persistent environmental crisis.The deteriorating air quality raises serious questions about the effectiveness of existing pollution-control measures and the preparedness of authorities to protect public health. “What should be a basic necessity – breathing clean air – has increasingly become a challenge for millions of people. Immediate enforcement of pollution-control regulations, stricter monitoring of industrial units, scientific waste management, dust-control measures and coordinated action among neighbouring states are essential.The crisis demands more than temporary restrictions and seasonal emergency measures. Governments must adopt a comprehensive, long-term strategy to address the root causes of pollution. Clean air is not a luxury; it is a fundamental necessity for life. Unless concrete action is taken now, the people of Delhi-NCR may continue to pay a heavy price for years of environmental neglect.

“The bench made these observations while hearing a petition filed by Vishwajeet Singh, a manager at the Samastipur Sadar Hospital in Bihar. He had been arrested under the Prevention of Corruption Act following allegations that he demanded a bribe of Rs. 4,000 to clear outstanding wage dues of Rs. 36,421 owed to a contractor. Following his arrest, he remained in judicial custody for approximately 15 days. In this case, the Sessions Court granted him bail, but the Patna High Court subsequently set aside that order. He then approached the Supreme Court, which restored his bail. However, the bench expressed deep surprise that the accused’s suspension had been revoked, allowing him to return to the same hospital and the same position while the proceedings were still underway. "This is shocking. The state government must review this matter immediately," the court directed. Noting that bail is generally granted in such cases provided there is no history of serious criminal offenses the Supreme Court quashed the Patna High Court's order and restored the bail granted by the Sessions Court.

Vijayawada, Pen Power, November 10: The Andhra Pradesh State Commission for Protection of Child Rights (AP SCPCR) has called for comprehensive administrative reforms to make the father's name non-mandatory in government forms and official records wherever it is not legally required. The Commission stressed that no child should be denied education, identity documents, welfare benefits or essential services due to the absence of the father's details.""The call was made during a one-day state-level workshop on "Making Father's Name Non-Mandatory," jointly organised by the Children of India Foundation and AP SCPCR in Vijayawada on November 10. AP SCPCR Chairman Sri Vetukuri A.V.S.S.N. Raju, who attended the programme as the Chief Guest, emphasised that children's dignity, identity, equality and fundamental rights must be given priority in government documentation procedures. The Chairman stated that every child is an independent rights-holder and that a child's identity, dignity and future should not be determined by the marital status or family circumstances of their parents. Referring to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC), he highlighted the principles of non-discrimination, child welfare, identity, privacy and the right to education.""He pointed out that children of single mothers, unmarried women, widowed and divorced women, survivors of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, as well as children living under the care of guardians, often face difficulties when government applications insist on the mandatory disclosure of the father's name.""Such requirements create unnecessary barriers in obtaining birth certificates, school admissions, scholarships, identity documents and welfare benefits. The Chairman stressed that government documentation systems should facilitate children's access to rights and services rather than become obstacles to their development and well-being.""The workshop urged various government departments to review their existing application forms, registration procedures, online portals and verification systems to identify provisions where the father's name is unnecessarily treated as mandatory.""The participating departments were urged to accept the mother's name or legally recognised guardian's details as appropriate alternatives, ensure that no child is denied essential services, modify government databases and online portals, and issue clear instructions to officials at district, mandal and grassroots levels. The need for an effective grievance-redressal mechanism and increased awareness among field-level officials was also highlighted.""Dr. Rayapati Sailaja, Chairperson of the Andhra Pradesh State Commission for Women, emphasised the need for coordinated action and convergence among all concerned departments and AP SCPCR to take the initiative forward. She called for efforts to secure a Government Order ensuring that no child is denied access to education or opportunities and stressed the importance of equal opportunities for all children and women, irrespective of their circumstances.""The consultation also highlighted the need for a uniform, child-friendly administrative framework across Andhra Pradesh. The participating departments were urged to formulate concrete recommendations, nominate departmental nodal officers and prepare a time-bound action plan for implementation.""The Commission clarified that making the father's name non-mandatory is not intended to exclude fathers or undermine lawful parentage and parental responsibilities. Instead, it is an inclusive administrative reform aimed at safeguarding every child's dignity, equality and right to identity, wherever legally permissible. Concluding the address, the Chairman stated that a child's future should never be restricted by the absence of a father's name in a government document. He stressed that no child should be questioned about family circumstances before being allowed to exercise their rights and called upon the government to establish child-friendly documentation guidelines across all departments through a comprehensive Government Order or administrative circular.""The workshop aimed to translate the principles of the UNCRC into practical administrative reforms and strengthen an inclusive, sensitive and child-friendly governance system in Andhra Pradesh. Democracy Reduced to a Farce

"The alliance led by the Telugu Desam Party secured a lead in the municipal and parishad (local body) elections held in the state. However, proponents of democracy have condemned the autocratic tactics employed by the ruling alliance at every stage of the electoral process. From the very beginning—the nomination phase—there were instances of opposition candidates being obstructed, attacked, and threatened, with nomination papers even being torn up. According to official data, 261 cases were registered across the state during the municipal elections, while 31 cases were filed across 13 districts during the nomination phase of the parishad elections; full details regarding the latter are still awaited. Among the cases registered by the police, some were fabricated by the ruling party, while others were filed by individuals who managed to overcome threats and acts of violence to reach the police stations. A significant number of victims could not—or did not—even manage to reach a police station. Reports of opposition agents being forced out of polling stations, instances of violence, electoral rigging, and similar irregularities during the counting process further underscore the gravity of the situation. Winning an election is one thing, but ensuring that opponents have the freedom to compete is quite another. The prevailing public sentiment is that the elections in the state were not conducted in an environment that allowed for such fair competition. Along with the police machinery, the conduct of the State Election Commission (SEC) has also come into question during these elections. On October 21, the Supreme Court intervened and directed the SEC to examine complaints and evidence from candidates who were unable to file their nominations, and to extend the deadline wherever necessary. Following this directive, the deadline for filing nominations in four urban local bodies was extended by 48 hours on October 22. The fact that the ruling coalition's irregularities continued unabated even after the Supreme Court's interim orders is a testament to their brazenness. In reality, the Election Commission ought to have acted independently and transparently, conducting an impartial inquiry into every complaint. It should have scrutinized the evidence of wrongdoing and taken legal action against the perpetrators, regardless of their political affiliation. In instances where allegations were proven true, re-polling should have been conducted in accordance with the rules. It is the responsibility of both the Election Commission and the police force to uphold public trust in the electoral process. Instead, it is widely known that in many places, the police functioned at the behest of the ruling coalition. Furthermore, allegations that nomination papers and 'B-forms'—which were in the custody of returning officers—were torn up are not without basis. Government officials and the police apparatus must remain loyal to the public and to democracy, rather than serving the party in power. While it may be difficult for lower-level employees to act honestly and in accordance with the law under pressure from the ruling party, it is unacceptable for high-ranking officials to succumb to such inducements or pressures. They need to introspect and ask themselves whether they have performed their duties with integrity and sincerity."It is highly inappropriate for YSRCP leader and former Chief Minister Jagan Mohan Reddy to claim, on one hand, that his party is a victim in these elections, while simultaneously signaling—on the other—that if he returns to power, he would act in the same manner, or perhaps even more aggressively."What is the implication of comparing the conduct of these elections to the situation in Bihar and suggesting that such practices would continue if his party were to regain power? If the focus shifts to competing over who can set the state ablaze—turning it into a chaotic inferno—where is the room for development? Democracy is not merely about holding elections or securing a majority of seats; it requires ensuring that the opposition has the right to compete and campaign, and that the public has the freedom to cast their votes. These are fundamental components of a democracy. Using state power and political influence to stifle the opposition's voice or to render them unrepresented is deeply detrimental to democracy. Local governing bodies should reflect the concerns of people in both rural and urban areas; for this to happen, the voice of the opposition must be heard.

Conversely, the stance that the ruling coalition should secure everything is highly undesirable. Despite the intimidating atmosphere created by the ruling coalition, the people—unafraid—ensured the victory of the opposition in a significant number of seats. It is commendable that, rejecting illicit practices such as the distribution of money and liquor, the electorate chose candidates from the Left parties, even if only in a limited number of constituencies. It is the responsibility of every individual to question electoral malpractices, stand by the victims, and oppose the abuse of power. The public must be sensitized and mobilized in this direction.

Vaccines.. A Protective Shield

We have long been familiar with the adage, "Prevention is better than cure." Vaccines serve as a protective shield, capable of warding off life-threatening diseases for a lifetime. It is our fundamental responsibility to ensure that everyone receives vaccinations. According to the World Health Organization, 2 to 3 million children die every year a sobering statistic. Since 1974, vaccination efforts have saved at least 154 million lives. Administering vaccines during childhood provides lifelong protection against various dangerous diseases, including diphtheria, tetanus, polio, measles, COVID-19, pneumonia, and rotavirus-induced diarrhea. These affordable, highly effective, and easily administered vaccines offer a lifelong shield for society. National Vaccination Day should serve as an ongoing platform to raise awareness about vaccines, dispel fears or misconceptions, actively participate in vaccination drives, promote government immunization programs, and honor the healthcare workers who dedicate their services to this vital cause. Let us undertake various initiatives such as promoting vaccination drives aimed at controlling dangerous infectious diseases, reducing infant mortality, improving public health, ensuring affordable access to vaccines, and strengthening community immunity while also working to raise public awareness.

31.2% Ethanol in Petrol

- Karnataka government's statement sparks a controversy
- Government announces inspections in Kerala as well

Bengaluru: A major dispute has erupted between the Karnataka government and the Union Ministry of Petroleum regarding the quality of E-20 petrol. Karnataka has reported that samples collected from petrol pumps across the state contained up to 31.2% ethanol. In contrast, the Centre and Oil Marketing Companies (OMCs) maintain that the fuel adheres to established standards. This has triggered widespread criticism concerning fuel quality, consumer protection, and the national ethanol-blending program."What happened?: The state government collected 63 petrol samples from seven districts, including Bengaluru, Kolar, Chikkaballapur, and Bengaluru Rural. When tested in laboratories accredited by the NABL and certified by the ISO, the results showed that samples from Indian Oil (IOCL) contained up to 31.2% ethanol, while those from HPCL contained up to 30.5%. These findings were disclosed by Karnataka's Minister for Food, Civil Supplies, Consumer Affairs, and Legal Metrology, Rizwan Arshad, during a press conference in Bengaluru on Friday. He explained that nearly four out of every five samples contained more than 20% ethanol. Arshad stated that approximately 99 percent of the vehicles in the country are not designed to handle fuel blends exceeding the E20 limit. He estimated that consumers are incurring losses of around Rs 60,000 crore annually. He demanded the creation of an "E20 Spoilage Fund" to compensate consumers whose vehicles have been damaged. It was also reported that Rs 6.66 lakh in fines had been collected from petrol pumps during the initial phase of inspections. However, IOCL, BPCL, and HPCL have dismissed these claims. In a joint statement, the companies asserted that the E20 petrol being supplied across the country complies with the Bureau of Indian Standards (BIS) norm, IS 17021.""Must disclose the exact blend ratio...": Arshad challenged the statement issued by the Oil Marketing Companies (OMCs). "They failed to answer the fundamental question: what exactly was the blend ratio—was it E20, or something higher? Their entire statement focused solely on technicalities. We stand by the results of our tests," he clarified.

He added that they followed the scientific methodology prescribed by the OMCs; the collection of samples was conducted in accordance with the 'Motor Spirit and High Speed ??Diesel Order, 2005,' and the samples were signed off by designated officials and dealers. He further noted that the density of the fuel was recorded on-site. Against the backdrop of these developments, the Kerala government has ordered the testing of petrol samples across the state to independently verify the 31 percent levels reported by Karnataka.

Wife murders husband with the help of her lover

- Failed attempt to cover up the crime by framing it as a heart attack
- Brutal act committed because the husband stood in the way of an extramarital affair
- Truth revealed through the post-mortem report"
- Bengaluru police arrest the wife and her lover

Bengaluru: A shocking incident has come to light in Bengaluru. Police have arrested a woman and her lover for murdering her husband who they believed was an obstacle to their extramarital affair and subsequently attempting to pass off the death as a heart attack. The incident took place in Doddathoguru, under the jurisdiction of the Electronic City Police Station."Upendra (41) and Anita (36), a couple originally from Andhra Pradesh, were living in the area. Anita was involved in an extramarital affair with Madhusudhan Reddy (46), who hails from the same village as them. Upon discovering the affair, Upendra issued a stern warning to both of them. Deciding that Upendra was an impediment to their relationship, Anita and Madhusudhan plotted to kill him. Following their plan, they suffocated Upendra to death in the early hours of October 12. They then tried to convince everyone that he had slipped while heading to the bathroom and died of a heart attack. However, following a complaint filed by Upendra's brother, the police registered a case of suspicious death. The investigation took a crucial turn once the post-morte m report was received. Acting on suspicions raised by the report, the police took Madhus udhan into custody on the 5th of this month; upon questioning,he confessed tothe crime. Based on the information he provided, Anita was also arrested the following day, and she too admitted to the truth. Consequently, the police reclassified the case as a murder investigation, produced both suspects before the court, and remanded them to judicial custody. Impact of investigation into CEO

Nvidia, one of the world's most valuable tech companies, suffered a massive loss in a single day. Controversial allegations against the company's CEO, Jensen Huang, and an internal investigation initiated by the company's board have sparked concern among investors. Consequently, Nvidia shares fell by 4.27% on the US stock market on Monday. This decline wiped out approximately $190 billion (over Rs 17 lakh crore) from the company's market value. By the close of the market, the price per share had dropped by $7.97, settling at $178.67."A $190 billion drop in market value in one day"At the close of trading on Friday, Nvidia's market value stood at approximately $4.5 trillion. During Monday's trading session, the company's market value saw a sharp decline as shares fell by as much as 7.5% at one point. According to a Reuters report, the share price ended the day 4.27% lower at $178.67. As a result, approximately $190 billion of the company's market value evaporated. In Indian currency, this amount exceeds Rs 17 lakh crore."A drop of two places on the Forbes billionaires list: The decline in Nvidia's share price has impacted Jensen Huang's personal wealth. According to the Forbes Real-Time Billionaires list, his net worth fell by $6.8 billion on November 9, bringing it to $155.4 billion. Consequently, he slipped from the eighth to the tenth position among the world's wealthiest individuals, with Warren Buffett and Larry Ellison moving ahead of him. A significant portion of Huang's wealth is derived from his stake of over 3.5% in Nvidia; therefore, any fluctuations in the company's share price directly affect his net worth."Are concerns regarding AI investments also a factor? Beyond the situation involving Huang, the pressure on Nvidia's shares is also driven by growing investor anxiety surrounding the AI ??sector. There is market skepticism about whether the massive investments being poured into data center construction, power consumption, and AI infrastructure will yield the expected returns. Furthermore, analysts believe that the potential for stricter restrictions and controls on chip exports between the United States and China could pose an additional challenge for Nvidia. An investigation concerning the company is currently underway. Nvidia is scheduled to announce its quarterly financial results on November 17. These results, along with any findings that emerge from the investigation, are likely to influence the future movement of the company's shares."Extramarital affair and allegations of Chinese espionage: Nvidia CEO Jensen Huang has admitted to an extramarital affair with Alice Huang, who is suspected of being a Chinese spy. Reports suggest that Alice developed a close relationship with Jensen and subsequently transferred sensitive information to China. It is reported that in a message sent to his employees regarding this matter, Huang expressed regret for the pain caused to his wife and children. He reportedly apologized for his actions and stated that he would fully cooperate with the company's investigation. In light of these developmen ts, Nvidia's board initiated an inquiry conducted by a committee comprising independent directors and external legal experts. However, the board clarified that there is no reason to believe that national security or Nvidia's confidential information has been compromised. The board also affirme d its continued confidence in Huang's leadership. The Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affa irs has denied the espionage allegations.

Indira Gandhi's Anger.. I Would Tremble in My Chair, Says Sonia Gandhi

New Delhi: In her book Belonging: A Journey of Love, Sonia Gandhi writes about her mother-in-law, Indira Gandhi. She mentions that whenever Indira Gandhi got angry, she would tremble in her chair. Sonia notes that Indira's temperament revealed the strength and firmness of her character. In the book, Sonia recounts several incidents from her early days after joining the Nehru-Gandhi family. She describes former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi as someone prone to intense anger, recalling how everyone present would tremble whenever Indira's temper flared. Throughout the 544-page book, Sonia shares various insights about Indira. She writes that her mother-in-law would occasionally burst into sudden outbursts, which would leave her—as well as the staff present—completely shaken or frozen in place. Sonia also shares an anecdote about a staff member who failed to remind Indira of an important appointment; as a result, Indira made the individual stand in a corner of the room. In another instance, she mentions a man dressed in a kurta and dhoti who was made to stand in the room for the entire day. In her book, Sonia writes that she used to spend half an hour every day with 'Ami Aunty,' a senior member of Indira Gandhi's staff. She recalls an incident where a senior political leader, following Indira's instructions, stood pressed against the wall of a room. Sonia notes that Indira had a unique way of expressing her displeasure—she would simply choose to ignore such individuals entirely. She also mentions that there were times when Indira Gandhi would become quite agitated even while at the dining table; on days when something intense occurred in Parliament, Indira's anger would carry over to mealtimes. Sonia recounts one instance where her mother-in-law, Indira, threw her dinner plate onto the dining table.""Sonia admits that, initially, Indira's outbursts used to unsettle her, reminding her of her own father's temper. She writes that there were moments when she would be deeply shaken—even trembling. During such episodes, both Rajiv Gandhi and Sanjay Gandhi would sit in silence, waiting for the storm to pass. Rajiv would reassure her, telling her not to be afraid and explaining that his mother would eventually return to her normal self. In her book, Sonia writes that before she truly understood Indira, she would tremble even while sitting in a chair in her presence. Sonia notes that while Indira might occasionally give in to fits of temper, she would later express regret. However, she would never forgive those who betrayed her trust; such individuals were permanently cast out of her life.""Sonia mentions that Indira Gandhi had a great fondness for old photographs, sarees, and Kashmiri shawls. She would organize the old photographs chronologically. At times, she would take out her sarees and arrange them in a systematic way—sometimes bundling specific sarees together and attaching tags to them. She would also keep sarees that had been worn once separate from the others. Occasionally, Indira would gift some of her sarees to relatives. Sonia adds that Indira had a deep love for sarees and even kept her own mother's sarees in her cupboard. Furthermore, Sonia observes that Indira's temper mellowed somewhat after she became a grandmother. Sonia wrote that as her children grew older, she would send them to Indira first—partly to gauge her mood—but the moment they arrived, Indira's heart would soften like butter. Whether the children laughed or asked an innocent question, Indira would melt; Sonia noted in her book that, at such moments, Indira would become completely relaxed.

A Stellar Business Deal for ‘Haindava’

“At one point, young Tollywood hero Bellamkonda Sai Sreenivas enjoyed significant popularity not only in the Telugu states but also in the Hindi market. His films, in particular, garnered immense traction through their Hindi-dubbed versions. There was a strong demand for his movies not just on YouTube, but also across television and OTT platforms in North India. Consequently, a large portion of the production costs was typically recovered through the sale of non-theatrical rights. However, shifting circumstances have brought about several changes in this market. With OTT platforms now exercising greater caution in acquiring films, securing digital rights has become a challenge—even for movies featuring major stars. Against this backdrop, ‘Haindava,’ the latest film starring Bellamkonda Sai Sreenivas, is drawing attention for its impressive non-theatrical business.“Previously, Tollywood films generated substantial revenue through Hindi-dubbed, satellite, and digital rights. Companies were often willing to pay hefty sums for dubbing rights, recognizing the strong appeal that action-oriented films held among North Indian audiences. Recently, however, the landscape of the OTT market has undergone a transformation. Digital platforms are now finalizing deals only after carefully evaluating factors such as content quality, the market appeal of the lead actors, the film's release date, and audience response.

In some cases, these platforms prefer to acquire rights only after the film’s theatrical performance is known, rather than before its release. This has created a degree of uncertainty for producers regarding non-theatrical revenue. Against this backdrop, a business offer received for the film 'Haindava' has reportedly come as a major relief to its producers. It is understood that the prominent media conglomerate Zee has made a substantial offer for 'Haindava,' which stars Bellamkonda Sai Sreenivas.

Industry circles suggest that Zee has secured the non-theatrical rights for the film for approximately ?30 crore. Securing a deal of this magnitude is particularly noteworthy given the current slowdown in the market for OTT and other non-theatrical rights. Additionally, it is reported that another ?2 crore has been generated through the film's audio rights. Consequently, the total business from non-theatrical and audio rights concluded even before the film's releaseis said to amount to ?32 crore. If this deal is confirmed, it represents a significant achievement for 'Haindava' under the prevailing market conditions.

India vs New Zealand

Third ODI abandoned without a single ball bowled

- Shubman Gill wins the toss and elects to bowl
- Captain decides to field the same Indian side, making no changes
- Play interrupted as heavy rain returns
- India leads the five-match series 2-0
- Fourth ODI to be held at Bay Oval on November 13

Rain disrupted the third ODI between India and New Zealand. The match, scheduled for Tuesday at Seddon Park in Hamilton, was abandoned without a single ball being bowled. Consequently, India maintains a 2-0 lead in the five-match ODI series. The toss was delayed due to persistent rain since the morning and had to be postponed several times. A brief break in the rain allowed for the toss to take place; Indian captain Shubman Gill won it and elected to bowl first. Having won the toss for the third consecutive time, Gill decided to field the same team that played in the previous two matches. Arrangements were made to shorten the match to 40 overs per side. However, just as preparations for the start of the match were underway, the rain returned. As it intensified shortly after, the ground was covered once again, and the players retreated to their dressing rooms. The cut-off time to conduct a 20-over match was 7:50 PM New Zealand time. Although there were still 70 minutes remaining until that deadline, the umpires decided to call off the match as there were no signs of the rain subsiding. With the third ODI abandoned, India maintains a 2-0 lead in the series. Both teams will now travel to Tauranga for the remaining two matches. The fourth ODI is scheduled for November 13 at Bay Oval, and the fifth ODI will take place on November 15.
